Just something I realised since the goods are going for deep burial, the disposal company won't be able to destroy the container. As such provided that the goods are secured by the disposal company and they provide proper certification that the goods have been sufficiently destroyed, then we are satisfied with the disposal process.

Let me know if you have any further questions.

I will be assuming the importer did not break the seals prior to the inspectors arriving. In this instance I am fine with them having the consignment unpacked prior to deep burial WITH the requirement that we have biosecurity officers overlooking the whole time. Once the unpacking has been completed for insurance purposes, the prawns should be re-sealed into the container and then sent for destruction as per their instruction.

If you have any questions, let me know

Hi s. 22(1)(a)(ii)

Sorry for the confusion, please note that the whole shipment is being claimed through our insurance, therefore what we're intending to do is to unload the products first at Lineage Laverton, as the shipment requires a marine surveyor from the insurer's end to be present during unloading as well. This procedure is part of the requirements in lodging insurance claims.

Then once stocks are stored at Lineage Laverton under quarantine status, we will book a company that handles deep burial services to arrange disposal for us and we will send the copy of certificate of disposal to your department.

Please let us know if you need further clarifications.

Thanks,

Hi s. 47F(1)

Lineage Aus (V3152) does not offer Deep Burial service, is there an alternative AA location you wish to elect for the Deep Burial of the entire consignment? Preferably an AA location of class 8.2. Please find alternative AA location, complete the Permission to Dispose of Goods form again and resend.

Good morning,

If you are only unloading the consignment of prawns to be stored at Lineage and having it collected for deep burial at another AA location. Please complete the form with the specified location for Deep Burial. You will then receive a movement permission direction to have the consignment moved to that AA location.

Regards

Hi Biosecurity team,

Please be advised that due to the damage in the container (YMLU5371918), the condition of the goods from this shipment were compromised and are now all out of specifications.

Therefore, KB SEAFOOD COMPANY PTY LTD have made the decision to discard the whole shipment and would like to request for disposal/destroy direction instead.

Please advise if you require further information, looking forward to your response. Thank you.

Regards,

Hi Inspection Support.

I am currently supervising the last of the disposal of the subject entry and am wondering what you'd like me to do in AIMS.

I can update the destruction direction but am not sure if I am to leave it open for submission of any required paperwork or raise another direction.

Can you please advise.

Cheers,
